A Poison Tree

I was angry with my friend;
I told my wrath, my wrath did end.

I was angry with my foe
I told it now, my wrath did grow

And I watered it in fears,
Night and morning with my tears;

*And I sunned it with my smiles,
And with soft deceitful wiles.*

*And it grew both day and night,
Till it bore an apple bright.
And my foe beheld its shine
And he knew that it was mine.*

*And into my garden stole
When the night had veiled the pole;
In the morning glad I see
My foe outstretched beneath the tree*

Four score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent, a new nation, conceived in Liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether the nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battle-field of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field, as a final resting place for those who here gave their lives that the nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

But, in a large sense, we can not dedicate—we can not consecrate—we can not hallow—this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it, far above our poor power to add or detract. The world with little note, not long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us the living, rather, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increase devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion—that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain—that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom—and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the Earth.
