

ART APPRECIATION

WHAT IS ART?

The term ART derives from the old Latin, which implies a “craft or specialized sort of expertise, as carpentry or smithing or surgery” (Collingwood, 1938). (Collingwood, 1938).

The Subject of Art

In any art form- be it painting, music, sculpture, architecture, or dance that serves as the FOUNDATION OF THE CREATION of the work of art.

- The subject of art is VARIED.
- Usually anything that is represented in the artwork. (person, object, sense, or event).

Presented in 2 ways:

1. Representational/ objective art : Artworks that depict something that is easily recognized. The subject is clear/ identified. Ex. Painting * Sculpture* Graphic Arts Literature Theater Arts.

2. Non- representational/ non- objective art: Artworks that has no resemblance of any real subject. Do not represent anything & they are what they are. Appear directly to the senses primarily because of the satisfying organization of their sensuous and expressive elements. Ex. Music * Architecture Abstract Art Non- figurative arts Etc.

ASSUMPTIONS OF ART

1. Art Is Universal

- Timeless, transcending generations and nations through and through.
- Misconception: Artistic created long time ago.
- Age is not a factor in determining art.
- Literature has contributed crucial terms of art.
- Iliad and the Odyssey are the two Greek Epics that one's being taught in school.
- The Sanskrit compositions Mahabharata and Ramanaya are also classics in this domain.

2. Nature Is Not Art, and Art Is Not Nature

- In the absence of a depiction of reality, art may be thought of as a perspective of reality.
- In the Philippines, it is fairly uncommon for some viewers of local films to express their dissatisfaction with the films' realism by stating that they are unrealistic. They argue that local movies are based on a set of formulas that are detrimental to the content and fidelity to reality of the films they produce

- 'Well and Grinding' is a painting by French artist Paul Cezanne that depicts a situation from reality.
- The Chateau Noir's Forest has a wheel, and it is located there.

3. Art is a result of personal experience

- It is not a comprehensive guide, but rather an experience. The actual act of accomplishing something.
- For others, reaching this point without having a good definition of art might seem bizarre and bizarre. For the majority of people, art does not need a comprehensive definition. Art is nothing more than a sensory experience.

ELEMENTS AND PRINCIPLES OF ART

ELEMENTS

There are six integral components in the creation of a design: lines, colors, texture, and shape.

LINES

- Verticality is associated with dignity, formality, stability, and strength.
- Horizontal axis represents quiet, tranquility, and relaxation. Vertical axis represents activity.
- Action, activity, enthusiasm, and movement are represented by the diagonal.

It has the look of softness and generates a relaxing sensation or atmosphere. It represents freedom, the natural world, and the ability to be creative.

COLOR

- Color has an immediate and significant impact on the design of a piece of artwork. Colors can influence how individuals feel and behave.
- Warm Colors: RED, ORANGE, and YELLOW
- Cool Color : BLUE, PURPLE, and GREEN

FORM/SHAPE

- Whatever something is in terms of its form, outline, or arrangement.
- Squares, circles, ellipses, ovals, rectangles, and triangles are all possible shapes.

SPACE

- It can either increase or decrease visual space.
- Open, uncluttered environments are preferred. Crammed and overburdened.

TEXTURE

- The appearance or feel of an object's surface.
- Reflects lighter than a rough surface, making the color more vibrant as a result of the reflection.
- Rough surface
- Absorbs more light, giving the appearance of being darker.

VALUE

- Tone (the degree to which a color is bright or dark)
- Shade (the degree to which a color is light or dark)
- Tint (A pale or faint variation of a color)

There are five fundamental principles that underpin an engaging design.

Balance

- Parts of the design are evenly placed across the space to generate a feeling of solidity. It's possible to have both bodily and visual equilibrium.

Rhythm

- Using line, form, color, texture or pattern repeatedly is what patterning is.

Emphasis

- The most personal component of a design is the way it is highlighted. This is the aspect that draws in viewers. It may be created using several elements like as size, positioning, color, and line use.

Proportion and scale are important considerations.

- It is the comparative connections between components in a design that are measured in terms of their size and proportion

Unity

- is the use of uniform usage of lines, color, and texture across a design project.

ARTS AND ARTISANS

Painting, sculpture, dance, music, and poetry are examples of art practitioners who use their imagination to produce or develop indirectly utilitarian arts with aesthetic value. Artists include those who paint, sculpt, dance, and write.

A craftsman, such as a carpenter, a carver, a plumber, a blacksmith, a weaver, an embroider, and so on, who creates directly utilitarian and/or ornamental arts is known as an artisan.

SOULMAKING

Soul-making is a nontraditional method of getting to know oneself and delving into the depths and true significance of what we do in our daily lives. It encourages the development of our inner artist while also assisting us in communicating with others, understanding culture, and embodying tolerance and peace. It opens the door to a plethora of different intelligences and expressions.

SOUL-MAKING is the process of creating and deriving meaning through art.

For a person to make sense of language and draw meaning from words, it is necessary to take into consideration semantic and grammatical principles.

ART FROM THE PERSPECTIVE OF PHILOSOPHY

Art as a kind of emulation

Plato's The Republic portrays artists as mimics, and art as nothing more than a collection of imitations. He believes that the things that exist in this world are simply copies of the original, the eternal, and that authentic beings can only be discovered in the World of Forms, according to his metaphysics or perspective of reality. Art is nothing more than a copy of another's work. In the World of Forms, a painting is just a copy of nature, which in turn is an imitation of reality in the actual world.

Art as a means of communication

In agreement with Plato, Aristotle, on the other hand, saw art as a tool to help philosophy in the pursuit of the truth.

Art is a representation of a version of reality. Aristotelian philosophy holds that art has two distinct purposes: it allows for the enjoyment of pleasure, and it has the power to be instructional, teaching its audience valuable lessons about life and its surroundings.

Art as a kind of unbiased evaluation

Kant's Critique of Judgment asserted that the judgment of beauty, which he regarded to be the foundation of art, was something universal, despite the fact that it was susceptible to subjectivity. In his understanding of beauty, he acknowledged that it is subjective.

Art as a means of conveying emotional content

Tolstoy believed that art has a significant function in communicating feelings that the creator has previously experienced to an audience via communication. Emotions are communicated via art
